

I am opposed to ANY thing that will increase the invasiveness of the outside world into my home. That opinion is not exclusive to the telephone, I'd like the internet to be included as well.

I believe that what comes into my home, through ANY medium, should be upon invitation only. Arguments otherwise are, in my opinion, are merely attempts to invade my privacy. Do a law abiding citizen no longer have control of his/her own HOME?

The right to advertise, solicit, and otherwise campaign for ANYthing does NOT supersede my privacy in my own home. If I wish to hear about a subject, whether it be a product or a political opinion, I know where to go - the phone book, the internet, the television, the radio. I want to CHOOSE to go there. They have no right to enter my domain without my permission.

For those who don't mind, they ought to remain on a 'call list'. But for those of us who DO mind, we ought to have an option to be on a 'NO call list'.

Doesn't that sound reasonable in a democracy such as we have?
